Huge kek. I was so annoyed when they gutted it. It used to work a lot like IRC. There were unmoderated channels for every topic under the sun, and there was actually people in them.

The irony of twitter just being a brevity enforced IRC leads me to believe yahoo dropped the ball very hard.

It was glorious! I think myspace really killed it though.

I'm glad Tom sold it and made a fortune, honestly. It really did change everything.

Compared to facebook. It's like people forget:

Facebook was Mark Zuckerberg's attempt to get laid in college. You could only get in if you had an .edu email address. It was nothing but us college kids and it was used almost entirely for meeting girls.

But Mark being of royal blood, and attending a royal school, caught the attention of powerful faculty, and was eventually guided and groomed to create the massive data collection intelligence tool it is today.
